

Whilst still studying for my degree in Outdoor Education I completed my D1 license with TRSSL. The decision to take the training proved invaluable to me going straight into full time employment at the end of university, as the D1 entitlement is an essential part of an Outdoor Education Instructors CV. I enjoyed the training I received so much from TRSSL that when I took my E Class trailer licence it was with Geoff and his team.

One of the biggest barriers to Learning Outside the Classroom is that younger employees in education are unable to transport children and young people away from the school, a trend which needs to be changed. By taking the training whilst still at university the newest teachers and outdoor staff have the opportunity to change this situation, and enable more young people to access learning away from the school environment. As well as making the D1 holder a much more attractive candidate to future employers.

James Howell

Outdoor Education Instructor, and current MSc student of Outdoor Education at the University of Edinburgh.